Vale's Violin Valley

"I just can't figure it out," admitted Jeff Cameron, half owner of the Bar-XT Ranch. "Last month alone we lost thirty head of horses. Whoever the rustler is, that fellow has certainly figured out something new. What does he do? How does he get the horses off our ranches? Where does he go with them?"

"I lost ten horses myself," said Herb Granter of the Lazy-Q Ranch. "I have been checking around Dodge City, Cooperstown and Four Corners and even checked with the railroad at Mercerville, but not a horse has appeared for sale, nor has a horse been transported north or south. It gets me."

"What are you going to do about it?" demanded Slim Nash, the third owner present. His brand was the LOL and known well on both sides of the border because of the excellent quality of horses he sold. "There's something in this that really baffles me. How about that partner of yours, Jeff? He's an educated man. Can't he find the horses?"

In those days it was the custom of the rich men from England to invest their money in the cattle and horse ranches of a growing America. The returns of their investment were usually good. Wilfred Percival Vale, second son of Lord Darnsby, had come to the southwest. He had purchased half an interest in the Bar-XT Ranch. It was well known that his real interest centered in just two things. One was the violin which he would practice for an hour each day and the other object of his interest was Helen Cameron whom he liked very much.

"So I'll send Wil out to look for the missing horses," smiled Jeff Cameron. "There isn't much for him to do around the ranch. But I better send Mike Donovan with him just in case there should be any trouble with the Indians or the rustlers."

Helen was setting the table and Wilfred Percival Vale had just finished with his violin practice when Jeff Cameron returned from his meeting with the other two ranches.

"We have to find those missing horses," he told his partner. "Suppose you and Mike take a two week trip around the Prairies. Take enough grub for the time on a pack horse. Look around and maybe you can come up with the solution to the mystery."

Helen didn't like the idea of being separated even for that short interval of time from Wil. However she helped to assemble the necessary grub and early the next morning the two men were ready to leave. She kissed the man she loved and then gave a warning to Mike.

"Take good care of the boss. Be careful about those snakes on the Prairie. And stay away from the Indians."

It was only at the end of the first day's leisurely taken ride that Mike discovered his boss had also taken along the violin. There in the vast space of uninhabited territory, Wilfred Percival Vale practised on his violin for an hour. The horses seemed restless.

"Look boss," apologized Mike, "I don't think the horses appreciate good music. The violin has done something to them."

"Not the music," corrected Wil, "But evidently they are restless for another reason. Something tells them we are going to have a lot of company. And riding on horses."

Half an hour later about two hundred mounted Cheyenne under Chief Long Lance came to where the camp fire embers were dying out. The Englishman took his violin and played music. The Chief and several of his leading braves dismounted and listened attentively to the music.

"If one of my men sing Indian song, you make music?" he asked.

"I can do that," replied Wil. "Hope it is a good song."

Soon five Indians were singing an old

Cheyenne love song. Wil listened attentively. Then he reproduced the tune on his violin. Chief Long Lance was highly impressed.

"You come visit me at Fort Sill and play song," he said. "I give you any present you want. Why you here?"

Mike explained their search for the missing horses. The Chief spoke to his braves in his native tongue and then spoke in English to the two men.

"They know nothing of missing horses. They know nothing of rustlers who steal. They say horses go to hidden valley. Talk of big white horse that go out from hidden valley at night. He wants to be free. Wants other horses to be free. He visit the ranches. He get horses to follow him."

"Where is this hidden valley and how do I get to it?" asked Wil with curiosity in his voice.

"You follow Malindor River to where big falls come down. You wait and play music. Keep eyes open. You see horses."

The Chief then gave travelling directions to Mike and soon the two were on their way across the Prairie.

"Think there is anything to this story about the big white horse?" asked Mike.

"That remains to be seen," replied Wil. Those Indians were very peaceful."

Only later was he to learn that Chief Long Lance and his braves had left Fort Sill without the required permission of Colonel Nickleson. They were on their way to meet Chief Gornto and the Sioux he controlled. The purpose was to decide whether or not to take the warpath again. Fortunately for the settlers near the border, Chief Gornto had watched a demonstration of a Gatling gun. After a three day meeting, both Chiefs decided that at present it would be better to be at peace with the United States and draw food and clothing rations.

The two men reached their destination. The waterfalls was beautiful and the Englishman admired it greatly.

"Gives me an idea for a violin solo," he told Mike and then he started to compose it.

The two men slept peacefully until about midnight. Then Mike arose. He heard peculiar noises. He tugged at the sleeve of his boss.

"Take a look at what I see. Am I dreaming?"

The Englishman stared at the scene. He saw it yet couldn't believe what his eyes had witnessed. It seemed impossible but it was actually taking place! A white horse followed by three other horses went right through the waterfalls!

"That must be the entrance to the hidden valley," exclaimed Mike. "We, go through the waterfalls ourselves in the morning."

The two men were too excited to sleep the rest of the night. They had an early breakfast and then put on their slickers. They mounted their horses. The pack horse with the food and supplies followed Mike's horse. They went right through the falling sheet of water and came into a rich valley.

"It is wonderful," exclaimed Wil. "Something out of the past. As peaceful as the day when not a white man was on this continent. Look! There's the white horse with about thirty other horses."

"So our rustler isn't a man but a horse," commented Mike. "I wonder if they will ever believe this story when we get back. We will have to take them here and show it to them."

"And then what?" demanded Wil. "Why can't there be one place of peace and quiet left? I guess I really wasn't cut out to be either a cowboy or ranch owner. I have an idea in my mind. I am going back and speak to the other two ranch owners. Then I will go to Fort Sill. Or perhaps I will go to Fort Sill first."

On his way to Fort Sill, the two men again met Chief Long Lance. They still at that time had no idea of what had happened. Wil told his plan to the Chief.

"For this I and my people will sell you the valley. Keep it that way always."

They all went to Fort Sill. There they talked with Colonel Nickleson. He drew up the bill of sale and witnessed it.

"I've seen and heard a lot of strange things during my twenty years in the army," he said. "But this one really is different. I just hope it works."

When Mike and Wil returned to the ranch, Wil called a meeting of the other two ranch owners and told them the situation.

"Your rustler happens to be a white horse. I will pay each of you for the missing horses. Let them remain in that valley. I bought it from the Indians. Set it up as sort of a last sanctuary where the wild horses can remain. I figure arrangements will have to be made later to keep some kind of guard there for protection against outsiders."

The two ranch owners refused to take any money for the horses.

"Maybe it doesn't make sense what we are doing," said Herb Granter. "But if that's the way you feel about it, we certainly can go along."

The place later became known as Vale's Violin Valley. It was a protected sanctuary. Wilfred Percival Vale married Helen and they went to England to live. Twice they made return trips to America and each time visited the horse sanctuary.

Mike who went on a salary with the job of special ranger would often tell people: "Wonder what would happen if he played his violin here?"

My name is Charles Atlas. Of course, I can't promise that you'll win the title of "World's Most Perfectly Developed Man," as I did. But I do say that I believe I can make a mighty powerful He-Man out of you — in a very short time.

In fact, you can prove it to yourself in 7 days. At my risk, of course. And I have good reason for believing I can do it. Because during the last 30 years I have turned many thousands of weaklings — fellows who were ashamed of their bodies — into beautifully-proportioned human dynamos of strength, energy, and tireless endurance . . . with the kind of muscular development that needn't take "back talk" from any one. My big free book will tell you how my secret of Dynamic Tension may be able to do such a job for you. Where shall I send your copy? There's not a bit of cost or obligation on your part. So mail the coupon now.

Where Shall I Send Your Copy of My Big FREE BOOK?
